THEY SPANKED THE PRESIDENT

Congressional Leaders Will Not Do As He Says

The Washington Post writes:

President Roosevelt's program was panned by the Republican members of the Senate. The program is so great that it is possible to patch it up at the end of Congress. The program is not that in name, but in the body that actually does the things, and does them, not to be done.

The steering committee, and framed up plans for work and a journal, which, if it could be reached by the fact that a dozen prominent Republicans decided that nothing should be done with several of the President's recommendations made the rebuff given the more noticeable. It was a purely partisan affair.

After long, animated, and general discussion, these conclusions were outlined:

That no attempt will be made to amend the Sherman anti-trust act. The time is too short, and it cannot be made satisfactory to the labor. All hope of a compromise in that direction has been abandoned.

Two Battle Ships Final. There will be but two battle ships authorized by the pending naval bill. Administration Senators insist that the number should be fixed at four, but Mr. Hale declared the decision taken by the House was final and conclusive and an amendment of that character would never be passed.

No effort will be put forth to amend child labor legislation, except so far as it applies to the States of Colorado. There are too many different opinions among legislators as to the constitutionality of such an amendment.

A vote on the Brownsville bill will be permitted to go by default. No interest was manifested in any way or the other. The sentiment was that the Democrats are determined to have no legislation restore the dismissed negro soldiers and would cause the bills to be rejected if a vote were reached.

Appropriation bills are to be handled so as to afford no more time for the passage of bills carrying large sums of money and the calling up of those considered undesirable. Everything is to be held down to the last notch.

Currency Legislation Unlikely. There will be no currency legislation unless the Aldrich bill, in principle, is accepted by the House. In arriving at this conclusion, Senator Aldrich waxed humorous and told this story: "Two men were joint owners of a boat. One of them wanted to cast anchor and the other was determined to go to sea. After a long wrangle the first man decisively said: 'Well, I'll anchor my end of the boat and you can take your end out to sea and be damned.' The interpretation of this story is that if the House passes a bill creating a financial commission the Senate will tack the Aldrich bill to it, and send it back to the House."

It was decided to whittle all things to a fine point and adjourn by approximately May 16. Senator Beveridge was the feature of the committee's meeting. He made an impassioned plea for the President's legislative programme, consuming a large portion of the time in his argument. His chief contention was for two more battleships, a child labor bill, and amendments to the Sherman anti-trust act. He said the President would be satisfied with such action. He thought this a fair compromise.

The other members listened with patient toleration and then calmly determined to pursue the exactly opposite course.
